| Course Overview                        | This course is designed to provide students overviews of theory and practice in international sport policy. Student will study practical examples of current challenges and possibilities of sport policy in the United Kingdom and Europe, and develop a greater understanding of sport policy process and application through encouraging critical and open mind consideration regarding the validity and "power of sport" by taking two main case studies: (1) Sport for Development and (2) Olympic participation legacies.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

| Course Overview                        | An overview of the theory and practice of international development and peace through sport (IDS) studies, gaining an international, social and cultural perspective, and learning about the management of sports-based international contribution projects to solve social issues. The course focuses on the management of IDS projects and provides a hands-on experience on the structure and management of the projects provided for the realization of a sustainable and peaceful society. Specifically, students will learn how to plan and evaluate in accordance with "Project Cycle Management", which is based on a logic model to enhance the practical ability of development assistance.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

| Course Overview                                   | To develop the ability to practice a research project based on basic theories, such as planning a research project, constructing content, and proceeding with details. In this course, students will learn about management of their research projects, focusing on the planning, outline construction and details therein in line with the stated aims and objectives of the project.                                                                                                                                                                                       |

| Course Overview                        | The main goals of this course are to introduce students to the major theoretical streams in public policy and policymaking, as well as explore approaches to public policy research that combine policy and political analysis. The fundamental goal of public policy is problem-solving, and that is also the main objective of the class. Together, we will explore how this goal is accomplished. We will do so by identifying the relevant policy actors and institutions, policy needs and constraints, and, ultimately, why some public policies succeed and others fail.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

| Course Objectives(Learning Outcomes)   | The main goals of this course are to introduce students to the major theoretical streams in public policy and policymaking, as well as explore practical approaches to public policy. The fundamental goal of public policy is problem-solving, and that is also the main objective of the class. Together, we will explore how this goal is accomplished. We will do so by identifying the relevant policy actors and institutions, policy needs and constraints, and, ultimately, why some public policies succeed and others fail.The lectures in this course will provide an introduction to public policy and the policy cycle, explain theoretical and historical approaches to policy-making, and policy formulation. Students are encouraged to ask questions after each lecture, discuss the lecture material, and relate the lecture content to real-life situations. There will be some reading assignments. |
| Class Schedule                         | In the first two lectures of this course, I will introduce public policy. Then we will review the leading historical and theoretical debates in public policy, followed by lectures on policy formulation. We will also cover actor identification, interests and roles.(1)Course introduction, class survey to determine topics, student self-introductions. Reading assignment.(2)Explanation of course. | Course Overview                        | The main goals of this course are to introduce students to the major theoretical streams in public policy and policymaking, as well as explore approaches to public policy research that combine policy and political analysis. The fundamental goal of public policy is problem-solving, and that is also the main objective of the class. Together, we will explore how this goal is accomplished. We will do so by identifying the relevant policy actors and institutions, policy needs and constraints, and, ultimately, why some public policies succeed and others fail.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

| Course Objectives(Learning Outcomes)   | The main goals of this course are to introduce students very briefly to public policy in general, and then focus on social and communicative roles of public policy. We will explore the theoretical and practical nature of agenda-setting, framing, and communicating public policy through various media formats. The use of practical materials including local government websites, bulletins, social media, and other media channels form a significant portion of the case studies that we will take in this class.The lectures in this course will provide an introduction to public policy in general, followed by agenda-setting, framing, and communicating public policy. Students are encouraged to ask questions after each lecture, discuss the lecture material, and relate the lecture content to real-life situations. There will be some reading assignments. |
| Class Schedule                         | The main goals of this course are to introduce students to specific topics in public policy focusing on media-and communication-related functions such as agenda-setting, framing, and the use of various media channels such as traditional and online formats.In the first two lecture of this course, I will introduce public policy. | Course Overview                                   | This course offers an overview of the history and theories surrounding multicultural coexistence, and aims to impart the knowledge necessary for understanding the issues of discrimination and conflict that arise in the sport world, where multiple languages, ethnicities, and religions coexist. Using modern sports discourses in Africa as an example, this course further introduces problems such as discrimination, sports immigration, and economic disparities in the sport world, taking into account race definitions and development concepts in different eras. Students are expected to gain knowledge of cross-cultural understanding and multicultural coexistence that is essential for linking sport and development. |

| Course Overview                        | This class is an introduction to the analysis of social development. We will focus on several key topics, such as poverty, inequality, education, labor market, etc. to understand the key concept used in evaluating policy effectiveness, and to learn how empirical analysis can shed light on some important policy debates. We will review selected economic empirical research papers, learning how empirical data analyses are applied to problems in social development with the hope of improving policy design and implementation.              |

| Course Overview                                   | This course aims to train students to work with the data for conducting their scientific research in Sport for Development and Peace. Students will learn the interview skills and survey methods for a qualitative study and study design and data collection for a quantitative study for their problem statements and research questions.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

| Course Objectives(Learning Outcomes)              | 1) Students shall be able to distinguish the differences between quantitative and qualitative research, assess the roles of the researcher and the informant in the research process, and apply qualitative and/or quantitative research in their work.2) Students also shall be able to understand interview methods and qualitative data coding and how theory and practice are used when writing a research thesis.3) Students shall be able to demonstrate their understanding of the practical application of quantitative reasoning and select the appropriate data collection method for a given problem. |

| Course Overview                        | The current highly globalized world is replete with problems arising from cultural differences. Through simulations, presentations, and discussions regarding various problems and topics related to cultural differences such as intercultural awareness, intercultural communication, and intercultural exchange, this course will provide the students with opportunities to acquire the skills to decide their own courses of action and come up with their own solutions in a multicultural environment.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |
